On The Cover

The Flagler Auditorium is back with a full schedule of shows in its 30th year. Find out about one of Flagler County's jewels and who's coming up on stage for the whole season. Page 16.

Welcome to the fourth issue of Palm Coast magazine. Everything we could have wanted to happen to our new business by now has, in fact, happened. Well, almost. We'd still like to convince the people running Winn-Dixie and Publix in Palm Coast to allow us to distribute our magazine in their stores but other than that we can't complain. Wherever we do put the magazine (there's a list of locations in our ad on page 28) the copies disappear very quickly, advertisers are getting response to their ads and we're getting leads to great stories that need to be told in the community. Check out the article on page 8 about a local charity, Christmas Come True, for example, that tells a heart warming story of a local woman who's been playing Santa for a number of years to local families in need. And the Palm Coast Historical Society is now helping us show our city as it grew from nothing in 1969 to where we are today. We hope you keep reading as we aim to provide you with interesting information each month about this special place we call home.

Small Business Program Launched By Chamber

If you own a small business, home-based business or are an entrepreneur that wants to start a business in Flagler County, we're looking for you. The Palm Coast-Flagler Regional Chamber of Commerce, in collaboration with CareerSource Flagler/Volusia, is proud to announce the Chamber's first small business program for Flagler County business lead-

CareerSource has secured grant funding, and partnered with the Chamber, to help fund 10 scholarships for small business leaders who will work with consultants at the Coastal Entrepreneur and Innovation Institute to grow and strengthen their businesses. This intensive, one-year program will help coach small business leaders on different aspects of their business.

Finally, The Palm Coast Observer has committed to covering the progress of these businesses, which could help drive customers directly to program participants.

"Flagler County is home to thousands of small businesses. The first phase of our small business program is to begin working directly with a select group of small business leaders to help grow and strengthen their businesses," said Greg Blosé, President & CEO of the Palm Coast-Flagler Regional Chamber. "The second and third phases of our program will have a much broader reach, which will include additional education opportunities and will help connect consumers to our local small businesses. A special thank you to Robin King and the team at Career-Source Flagler/Volusia for helping make this program free for all participants."

Robin King, President & CEO of CareerSource Flagler/Volusia, said "I'm grateful for the opportunity offered us by the Florida Department of Economic Opportunity to provide resources for Flagler County. Supporting the development of our small businesses is a great investment for our community and workforce."

Palm Coast Mayor David Alfin said, "I applaud both the Chamber's and CareerSource's efforts to help strengthen and > grow small businesses in Palm Coast. I urge our city's small business leaders to organizations to take advantage of these useful resources at no-cost."

Christmas Come True Charity Helps Flagler Families In Need Every Year

The holiday dreams of less fortunate families in Flagler County are about to be granted again through the work of the Bunnell-based non-profit, Christmas Come True.

"If everybody gave just a little bit, we would have a lot to help these families," said Nadine King, the organization's founder, and executive director.

CCT was founded 13 years ago when King retired to Flagler County right during the 2008 housing bubble economic crash. "Businesses were closing, and people were losing their jobs," recalled King. "Flagler County was falling apart and I saw children that needed to feel some security."

Even though she was new to the area, King went door-to-door to businesses that remained open and asked for assistance for the newly established non-profit. She joined the county's chamber of commerce and went to every

"meet and greet" event available inquiring who could help.

"I went to everyone I could and just started asking people to help me get this done," said King.

Her efforts paid off.

That first year, CCT provided Christmas for 54 families with 152 kids. Since then, the CCT program has grown providing Christmas for 164 families with 503 children in 2020 with a total price tag of $168,000.

King's hope is that the organization, which depends on the generosity of others, will match, or exceed those numbers for 2021.

Christmas trees decorated with gift tags detailing the specific wishes of children in families CCT assists will be on display at 30-plus county businesses by the Sunday before Thanksgiving.

To make its deadline to deliver Christmas on Dec. 20 to area families, CCT needs donations by Dec. 10.

Each year, CCT volunteers interview the heads of household for each family to identify the exact needs and wishes of the children of the family – including their favorite colors.

"All of the presents are tagged and bagged without the kids seeing them so that parents and grandparents (who have stepped up to take care of for their grandchildren) have the ability to give these kids Christmas presents with dignity and make Christmas a special day for these children," said King.

She is facing a bit of a dilemma this year: She needs a 10,000 square foot space for the processing and distribution effort. King is still in search of such a spot – hopefully donated to the non-profit's work to keep more of its budget focused on presents and toys for kids.

But she remains hopeful that a local property owner with a Santa-like spirit will offer space for the temporary endeavor.

While its name implies a focus on the holidays, CCT operates year-round to help economically challenged families. Many single mothers and grandparents now taking on child-raising duties depend on CCT to offset the cost of clothing, food, and shelter needs.

"We work all year long helping families and getting them out of emergency situations and somewhat back on their feet," said King.

CCT's store, Begin Again Home Goods, generates enough to cover the group's operating expenses, said King. But it serves an even greater purpose: recycled goods available at affordable prices as well as a room in the store dedicated to the wares of local small business owners.

But as the calendar turns toward the holidays, King's energies are focused on Christmas and coordinating with the numerous volunteers that help CCT.

Stockings for the children are being sewn by one group of ladies; another group of women is baking enough cookies to provide one dozen per family.

Each family receives new clothing, wrapped toys and a Christmas turkey dinner with all the trimmings purchased from Publix.

In 2000, more than $3,000 in Publix gift cards were donated by community members to assist CCT in purchasing the dinners, which average about $60 per family.

"With the projected shortages, the dinners are going to cost more this year," said King. She estimates the Christmas dinners will cost anywhere from $70 to $75 per family this year. "I anticipate we are going to need more help to make Christmas Come True happen for these needy families."

"We truly do depend on the people of this community to make this happen," said King.

Begin Again Home Goods is located at 2729 E. Moody Blvd. in Bunnell. You can learn more about Christmas Come True online at www.christmascometrue.org or by calling 386-302-1290. — Amy Armstrong

The Origin Of Palm Coast And The Town's First Golf Course

The city of Palm Coast was originally created from a 48,000 acre tract of land which was part of a parcel that the American corporation ITT purchased in the late 60s to create a planned community. The company offered amenities — golf, tennis, boating and swimming — as activities for its residents. The first golf course was opened on September 17, 1971 and was named the Palm Coast Golf Club. Photos show the original welcome center for the entire community (upper left); the golf course in relation to the community (upper right); the first model homes (left); golf carts in front of the clubhouse (above); golfers on what was the 18th hole (lower left); and golfers returning to the "19th hole" (below). A look at the state of the stock market now and in the future

Equity markets rebounded and bonds declined last week following September's fall and the first 5% pullback in about a year. A temporary deal to raise the debt ceiling until December boosted investor optimism, but volatility remained elevated amid a surge in energy prices, persistent supply-chain disruptions, and labor-market shortages. We offer the following perspective on two factors that are currently clogging the pipes of an economy that remains well supported by pentup demand, strong consumer finances, and increased corporate spending.

Energy Crunch

• The price action in commodities stole the spotlight

last week, contributing to the elevated volatility in equity and fixed-income markets. Among eye-catching moves are that oil rose to a seven-year high, natural gas prices briefly spiked to 2008 levels after having dou-

The rocketing prices have triggered an energy crunch in Europe and China, hitting factory output and adding another complication in the long list of supply-chain issues that are holding back the global economic recovery.

 There is no single cause for the emerging commodity inflation. We see a combination of factors boosting demand and limiting supply.

- Demand is primarily benefiting from the gradual return of the economy to normal. On top of that, the ongoing pandemic and the restrictions that are still in place in many parts of the world have shifted consumption patterns towards goods and away from services, which translates to higher energy consumption for the manufacturing-focused economies.
- The recent parabolic rise in coal and natural gas prices has sparked fears that a similar move could be in the cards for oil. We believe that prices will stay supported as oil demand continues to recover from the pandemic. However, the rise in prices is likely to prove self-limiting, as high prices will incentivize increased production.

 Over the last decade the U.S. rig count, an important barometer for the oil-drilling industry, has closely followed oil prices, as seen in the graph below. However, follow-

 Even as prices have climbed. OPEC and its allies have maintained their output targets, slowly adding back production. But based on the difference between what the cartel is capable of producing and what it is actually producing, there is plenty of room to increase production to offset supply shortages, if they persist.

High energy prices generally act as a tax on the consumer and have the potential to dent consumption and therefore economic growth. However, we think that currently the economy can withstand any temporary commodity inflationary pressures.

- Consumers and business are no strangers to $80 or even $100 oil. In the years between 2011 and mid-2014 oil prices averaged $96, while the economy grew at a 2% pace despite a slow labor-market recovery and consumers focusing on paying down debt and saving more. In contrast now, household finances are in good shape, with the personal savings rate elevated and wages rising at the fastest rate in more than a decade.
- The U.S. and global economies are less reliant on oil than in the past due to significant energy efficiency gains over the years. Energy intensity, or the amount of oil necessary to produce a product or a service, has fallen by more than half since the 1970s, when frequent energy shocks caused stagflation (slow economic growth and rising inflation)

Worsening Labor Shortages The U.S. economy added 194,000 jobs in September, the smallest gain this year and well below estimates. More encouraging was that the August numbers were revised meaningfully higher and the miss in private-sector jobs was less severe. Employment in leisure and hospitality increased by 74,000, even though it remains about 10% below its pre-pandemic level1. The biggest detractor and disappointment came from the 180,000 decline in education (90% in the government sector), which was likely impacted by seasonal factors. With job openings at record levels, the expiration of pandemic benefits, and improving delta-variant trends, we think that hiring will pick up in the coming months, but the path towards returning to full employment will not be a straight line.

 Despite the disappointing job gains, the unemployment rate fell more than expected, to 4.8%, a new post-pandemic low. However, that was driven by an unexpected drop in the labor-force participation rate, indicating that more people left the workforce. With labor shortages appearing to worsen, employers are boosting pay as they compete to attract workers. Average hourly earnings (wages) rose 4.6% from last year and 0.6% from the previous month, the strongest advance since April.

The bottom line

Simultaneous labor and material shortages are causing snags in supply chains, constraining economic activity, and driving prices higher. We think these tensions in the economy will prove to be temporary but are likely to trigger increased market volatility and more moderate returns than experienced over the last 18 months. With our outlook for next year still positive, supported by an improving labor market, excess household savings, low interest rates, and a likely inventory rebuilding, we would view any deep pullbacks as buying or re-balancing opportunities.

Ways of clearing the cobwebs as we get older...

As we grow older, many of us notice a decreased ability to remember a person's name, a sequence of events or even what we had for lunch yesterday. We call it "a senior moment," and the more we notice this occurring, the more we ask ourselves: "Am I losing it?"

Losing our mental capability is one of the biggest concerns we have as we age. The fact of the matter is that research suggests over 500,000 people die each year of Alzheimer's and many families know the burden of taking care of elderly parents and the challenging decision to move them into memory care facilities or nursing homes.

But cognitive decline can start years before symptoms emerge, depending on various factors: genetics, inherited and/or acquired belief systems, diet/nutrition, pathological aging due to toxins and inflammation, immune function, physical trauma/injury and inactive lifestyle.

Genetics are important when evaluating a person's propensity toward health or illness, however the concept of a genetic predisposition toward a particular disease might be seen as a "sentence" rather than useful information on family health history.

More recently though, a new way of thinking about genetics has emerged in the field known as epigenetics. In his book "Biology of Belief," Dr. Bruce Lipton introduces us to the view that certain genes can either be "switched on" for better health and other genes "switched off" to lessen detrimental health effects.

This new science shows us that genes and DNA do not control our biology, rather the information our cells receive from the interaction between mind and body does. That means we may be able to influence genetic outcomes through nutrition and other measures.

So, how do you check and address above mentioned factors and what can you do to reduce or maybe even prevent deterioration of the brain?

Author Michael Morgan gives us hope with his book "Prevent Alzheimer's in just 10 Minutes a Day," suggesting that the combination of changes in life-style and self-care can significantly change the landscape of our brain.

Stress reduction is the number one recommendation. We all know and have heard it over and over that chronic stress can cause or exacerbate physical and mental health problems.

But we also know there are situations in life that cannot be changed or avoided. After more than 18 months of a global pandemic with devastating and often irreversible changes to our everyday routines, many have experienced an increased level of stress, anxiety and exhaustion.

Therefore we need to learn how to change our reaction to these situations by calming our sympathetic nervous system, the one that causes a Fight, Flight or Freeze response (these responses refer to involuntary physiological changes that happen in the body and mind when a person feels threatened, whether the danger is real or perceived).

How? That depends...

There are countless methods and modalities available and accessible but there are also countless different health issues, personalities with different schedules and means, likes and dislikes. The trick is to find what works for YOU, what helps your mind and body relax.

Is it meditation, visualization, music therapy, creative art, journaling or a combination of mind/body therapies, like yoga, tai chi, or qigong? Is it gardening, cooking, serving others? Or receiving the healing power of touch with massage or craniosacral therapy? Only you can discover how to change and maintain your well-being and health.

The same approach is true for the other recommended life-style changes: healthy eating and nutrition, rest and sleep, exercise, environmental awareness, nourishing relationships, being part of a community.

Where to start? Helpful resources on the world of health, aging and longevity can be found on the Internet. Go to ChangingAging.org, Phoebe. org, Researchgate.net or just Google "Functional approach to aging" or "Your brain on stress."

When should you start? NOW. You can choose your favorite and most effective way to reduce accumulated wear and tear in body and brain to improve vitality and well-being. So, brush away those cobwebs and be vibrant at any age.

Flagler Auditorium Stages Return To Live Performances In 30th Year

A buzz of energy surrounds you as friends greet friends and excited chatter fills the Flagler Auditorium lobby. Anticipation heightens as overhead lights blink on and off, prompting you to stroll inside to your chosen seat. The performance begins and soon you are in sync with the musicians belting out familiar songs. Whether tapping away in time to the tunes or singing along with favorites, from beginning to end, time flies.

Attending a live performance is often a communal, cathartic experience — one that we have all ached to repeat during the past 18 months. Happily, the yearning is over as opening night of the 2021-22 Auditorium Season is finally almost here.

Each show in this season will be a celebration of Flagler Auditorium's landmark 30th anniversary. Excited to present their brand-new season. Auditorium Director Amelia Fulmer eagerly shared other innovative options for event-goers. "This year we are offering a subscription package. All you have to do is choose your seats for the season, and we do the rest. Patrons who don't want to miss a thing also appreciate preferred seating, parking and other premium benefits."

explained that the initial Auditorium-Flagler Palm Coast High School collaboration included an Arts Educational System requirement. Reflecting on 30 years of excellence in achieving that goal, which is still going strong, Barb says, "I am so proud to see the long term development of our county's only fine arts facility."

Amelia added that each live show and every ticket purchased supports Flagler County students in performing arts, stagecraft, event technology and many other arts disciplines. As important as monetary assistance, are the educational opportunities students gain to learn, create, and share their artistic talents. Amelia continued, "They depend on our commitment to bringing quality entertainment to our county's residents."

That quality will be first on display November 19 as the 30th season kicks off with a Frankie Valli Tribute. A gifted 4-piece band backs six amazing singers who share an innate ability to entertain through their crystal clear vocals and crisp choreography. The powerhouse group will perform all of Frankie Valli's mega-hits including "Big Girls Don't Cry," "Walk Like A Man," and "Can't Take My Eyes thankful for, like the spirit of resilience and tenacity that prevailed the past two years through these challenging times." So many people joined together with the Auditorium leaders to fill the vacuum of communal local entertainment.

Amelia enthusiastically recalled. "We had musical shows and outdoor events that celebrated our community and local talent last Rock and Roll Hall of Famer, Darlene Love has launched dozens of hits including "He's a Rebel," "The Boy I'm Gonna Marry," and her signature song, "Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)." Flagler Auditorium's website says of Love, "This holiday season, the music icon will bring these classics and more, for a one-night-only holiday performance: Darlene Love. It's a season, and which we continue this year. We are more than an auditorium. This is the place to meet people that make Flagler County a great place to live."

Governing Board President, Sandra Siepietoski agrees. "This institution is a hidden gem not just in the community, but the entire region." She also praised the Auditorium Board's dedication, much of it accomplished until recently through Zoom meetings. They are careful to ensure that "every show is different." Sandra continued, "Variety is what makes the theater-going experience so special."

That magical variety is highlighted November 27 as the Frankie Valli tribute is followed by Last Child, Aerosmith Experience. The top notch, high energy musicians of Last Child perform and celebrate 50 years of music from Aerosmith, the best-selling American hard rock band of all time.

Longtime patron Carol Wright enthusiastically advocates for the entire Auditorium lineup. "Show days always bring a happy anticipation," says Carol. "And I've never been to a show I didn't like." A confessed closet chanteuse, she'll no doubt be singing along when Darlene Love takes the stage on December 11.

Grammy Award Winner and rockin' Christmas celebration you won't want to miss."

On hand to greet Ms. Love will be "back of the house" coordinator Elaine Gonsalves who excels at ensuring that professional performers have a pleasant experience. She decorates the backstage pre-show area, settles artists in the dressing rooms or make-up area, and arranges in-theater dining repasts for the artists.

Her efforts have helped ensure that many artists happily return. This season they include fan favorites like Abacadabra and One Night in Memphis. Also, The Bronx Wanderers who Elaine says, "have been coming here since they were kids."

On December 17, another familiar artist returns who once graced the Auditorium stage in "Little Shop of Horrors" while still a student at FPCHS. Alejandra Martinez is currently one of The American Sirens trio. She and her co-stars will entertain with hits that traverse decades from 1958's "Fever "to 1969's "More Today Than Yesterday" all the way through to 2014's "All About That Bass."

Aleiandra's career is a reminder of the Auditorium's ongoing mission, which is to provide support for youth arts education and not just on the stage. Because of

However, another reason so many buy a subscription or make donations is to help further the Auditorium mission: Arts Education for Flagler County Youth. Barbara Revels, a founding member of the original Governing Board, Amelia expanded on the significance of the choice, "Our first show this year, Let's Hang On, A Frankie Valli Tribute is a great theme to start our new season. We know that we have a lot to be donations and live opportunities, students from elementary to high school participate in dozens of school and community productions featuring many different art disciplines from dance to chorus to jazz bands. These opportunities provided many hours of enjoyment to our students, parents and citizens in well planned entertainment and arts enrichment."

Amelia Fulmer illuminates the various ways that donations and ticket proceeds help students. "They may help buy art project supplies or costumes for elementary school shows, band books for middle school musicians, or uniforms for chorus and band members. Contributions can also send students to band, chorus, and dance competitions, or educational summer camps. They help build a high school student's portfolio and provide art majors' scholarships. It could also help a tech intern learn special skills for their behind the scenes work.

That's where Auditorium Technical Director of 22 years, Jack Neiberlein, comes in. While most audiences are focused on the enchanting performances right before their eyes, much of that magic involves extensive backstage technical work. Once again, students trained in technical skills are paramount to what is usually and hopefully the hidden side of a show. Jack jokes, "You only know we're there if something goes wrong,"

Along with Assistant Tech Director Cole Sever, Jack oversees their training through school classes and on the job training at actual productions. There are many opportunities for hands-on experience besides the 15+ professional shows. "For the approximately 100 school events, tech support is completely handled by our students."

The backstage work involves many students, but those who love it most or envision a career path usually land in the Technical Theater Intern Guild. Jack stresses the advantage to interns of the FPCHS programs compared to other schools, "This facility and our visiting shows, some from Broadway, are state of the art. Other students will never get an opportunity to work with a $50,000 piece of equipment; ours learn on the best."

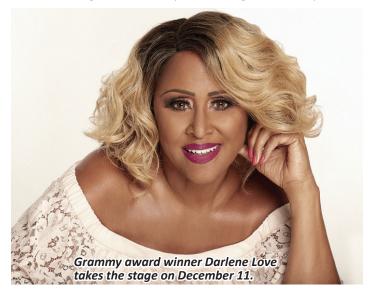

"Cole and I both come from professional backgrounds," says Jack.
"That and the students working side by side with current touring pros on state of the art equipment is what elevates their cutting edge experience to the level of guild training." Previously wary professional artists often declare that, "these are the best students we've worked with..." And occasionally, "... even better than some pros."

"Guild members build a portfolio and tech resume" he continues, "that can run the gamut from industry careers or becoming educators themselves." Jack and Cole are proud of the many Flagler graduates working in their field. In Florida alone, you can find them working in theme parks, on cruise ships, and in entertainment venues all over the state.

While Elaine, Cole, Jack, volunteers and students are managing the back of the house, Heather Turdo, Box Office Manager coordinates the front of the house and pre-show sales.

Heather is eager to assist every

It starts at the box office and culminates with show nights. "Talking to people and working to make them happy is my favorite part of the job," says Heather. She manages staff which, of course, includes students, both high school and college students, two of which currently are paid interns.

In addition, she flexibly coordinates up to 80+ volunteers of all ages assigning them to their preferred show nights and tasks. They

Heather said the rewards for herself and her volunteers on show night is being part of the attendee's experience. "Every show is different, so every crowd is too, and witnessing their reaction is so fun," says Heather. "You see their excitement. You see them clapping, tapping, sometimes even dancing, standing for ovations, and applauding. No matter the crowd, they all share their appreciation with us. They leave the show with smiles on their faces too."

Texas Roadhouse Has The Steaks, Seriously

Texas Roadhouse doesn't call itself a steakhouse per se, since there are a lot of other items on the menu including ribs, seafood and chicken, but make no mistake — this is a place to get great steaks.

A couple of recent visits confirmed this as we tasted the best steak we've had in several vears here at the Palm Coast location. And they have a good selection too, with sizes for every appetite and taste.

We sampled the 20-ounce bone-in ribeve and the 23-ounce porterhouse, both of which were plenty big enough for people with moderate appetites. Big eaters will handle these by themselves but with an Onion Blossom appetizer and a couple of sides, these steaks were fine for two of us.

On the other end of the size spectrum is the Dallas Filet, a 6- or 8-ounce portion. And in between are several other sizes of sirloin and ribeyes along with a prime rib portion that comes in several sizes as well. If you're a steak lover you'll almost certainly be able find something that's perfect for you just like we did. And one welcome feature that all of these steaks share is their reasonable prices. You won't break the bone-in ribeye.

The Cactus Blossom.

The 20-ounce

And of course there are many other items on the menu too, as mentioned above, that will satisfy anyone who doesn't eat beef.

There are a number of appetizers to try but we've never gotten past the Cactus Blossom (left), a Texas-sized onion that's deep-fried and served with a Cajun horseradish sauce and is totally addictive.

They also offer combo dishes that pair either chicken or shrimp with different steaks or their barbecued ribs. In the Country Dinners category they serve country-fried sirloin, pulled pork, grilled pork chops and beef tips.

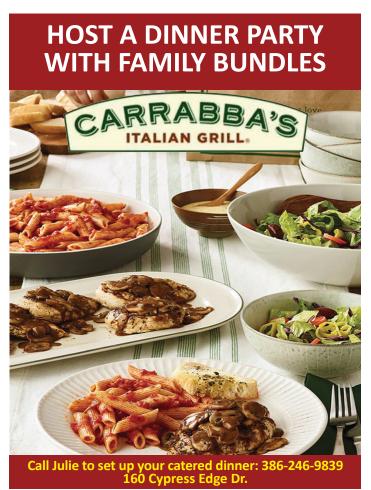

Sandwiches make it onto the menu with three different burgers, two types of chicken sandwiches and pulled pork.

There are many other items to try also, including some good looking salads and tempting desserts.

But if steak is your thing, give Texas Roadhouse a try. You won't leave hungry.

Entertainment

Flagler Youth Orchestra, CRT, Flagler Payhouse

Local entertainment options are as bountiful as the horn of plenty for the month of November. From the first season performance by the area's pride and joy — the Flagler Youth Orchestra — to performance by local thespians, those seeking a bit of culture without having to drive too far are in luck.

Flagler Youth Orchestra

The Flagler Youth Orchestra takes the stage at the Flagler Auditorium on Wed., Nov. 17 at 7 PM. for its first concert of the 2021-22 season.

The orchestra is comprised of Flagler County students ages eight and older who come from either homeschool or private or public schools. Enrollment and participation is at no cost to the students; the Flagler County Public School system in conjunction with the Friends of the Flagler Youth Orchestra pay for the orchestra expenses. Student musicians select from among these four instruments — cello, double bass, viola or violin — to play in the orchestra and participate in twice weekly practices. Students must audition to participate, but beginners are welcome.

The orchestra is conducted by Joe Corporon, who is also the youth orchestra's chief cello instructor as well as a principal cellist, frequent soloist and founding member of the Daytona Solisti Chamber Orchestra.

The anticipated playlist for the concert includes selections from Pachelbel and SaintSaëns.

Tickets are available online at www.etix.com. Cost is $3 for students and $8 for adults. Fair warning: Don't wait to get your tickets.

"Definitely get your tickets ahead of time if you plan to come," said Amelia Fulmer, director of the Flagler Auditorium Dennis Fitzgerald Performing Arts Center, regarding the 1,000 seats available. "This is a popular event. Tickets go fast and they will certainly sell out."

The auditorium is located on the campus of Flagler Palm Coast High School at 5500 East Highway 100 in Palm Coast.

Learn more about the youth orchestra online at: www. flagleryouthorchestra.org.

previous Tony Award winners – intentionally worked some drama, humor, and romance into the plot of the musical documenting the fictional lives of five characters as they try to navigate their lives filled with babies, coffee, and love.

This musical borrows hits from other Broadway shows – especially "Cabaret" and "Chicago." Selections in the FP version include: "Mr. Cellophane," "Maybe This Time," "Cabaret" and "New York, New York."

But don't expect those tunes to sound exactly as they did in their original formats.

"The really cool thing about this musical (The World Goes Round) is that these well-known songs are done completely different," explained Jerri Berry, president of the Flagler Playhouse. "They won't sound the same, but that is what makes it even more fun."

Tickets are available online at: www.tix.com/ticket-sales/flaglerplayhouse. Cost is $20-$25. Performances are Thursday through Saturday at 7:30 PM. and on Sunday at 2 PM.

The Flagler Playhouse is located at 301 E. Moody Blvd in Bunnell. You can learn more at: www.flaglerplayhouse.com.

City Repertory Theatre

Technically, this production isn't in November, but we thought we'd mention it now before all that tryptophan in your Thanksgiving dinner puts you in a turkey coma.

"Blithe Spirit" has a short run at the CRT Dec. 2 through Dec. 5.

This comedy written by Noel Coward might make you think twice about contacting the dead.

The lead male character, Charles Condomine, invites an eccentric medium and clairvoyant character, Madame Arcati, to his home for the purpose of conducting a séance as part of his research for a book he is writing. His plan backfires when the ghost of his first wife, Elvira, shows up and doesn't return to the spirit world after is haunting their home.

To avoid any spoilers, we aren't going to tell you anymore of the plot except to say that Elvira comes up with a rather unique way to make her presence known, or um, to get Ruth to believe she is indeed inside the home. We won't tell you who, but there is another death, revenge is sought, and the medium has to come back on scene in an effort to set things right.

Of course, if you really want to know ahead of show time, the plot is available on several websites.

But why do that to yourself and spoil the surprise if you don't already know the specifics before attending the show.

Who knows... perhaps the actor playing Condomine will end the show with Coward's signature move for his lead character? In many of Coward's other plays, the last action he writes for the lead is a deliberate tiptoeing off stage as the curtain falls.

able at: www.crtpalmcoast. com. Click on the green button with the white lettering, "Get Tickets."

Flagler Artists

Artist Hanneke Jevons keeps on teaching... By Amy Armstrong

Colored pencil art isn't just for elementary age students or the coffee and color gatherings of adults engaged in the fad of coloring books as grown-up therapy.

Just ask Hanneke Jevons, a Palm Coast artist specializing in the medium that is taking its rightful place among other art forms such as acrylic and watercolor painting as numerous professional improvements to colored pencils have been achieved in the past decade.

"The strong suit of (colored) pencil is that you can do anything with it," Jevons said. "There are so many different brands and varieties of pencils now. You can use pencil to create detail that you cannot with paints and the colors you can create is unlimited by using layering."

Since childhood, Jevons has focused on drawing. It's been her passion for as long as she can remember. She loves to capture the lines of animals — domestic or wild — on paper. And while she enjoys creating colors with her pencils, she is also as adept with graphite that creates black and white images.

It was a series of black and white horse photos that helped her earn the coveted "Signature" award through the National Colored Pencil Society. Signature award means the artist is allowed to use the society's acronym "CPSA" after their name when signing completed works.

In the world of colored pencils, this is a big deal. Only 250 people have earned the distinction that requires the artist's work has been included in three international shows within a ten-year time period.

"It was a goal of mine to earn Signature," Jevons said. "I just got mine in 2020."

Her work has earned other recognition. In 2019 she was a finalist for the artist of the year award from the Gargui> lo Foundation, a Palm Coast-based organization supporting the local art scene.

> As well as creating art, teaching others to create art is also a passion for Jevons.

Of course, in her years as an educator in the public school system, she taught all the art forms. But she was always drawn back to drawing — pardon the pun.

Now in retirement, she teaches from her home.

COVID-19 has put some restrictions on that. To protect her students — older, more immune, vulnerable adults — Jevons limits class size and requires vaccinations.

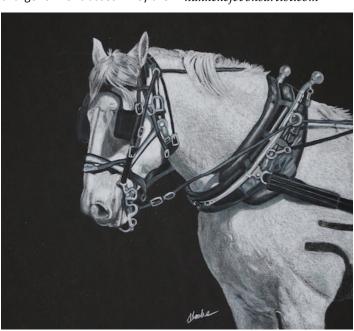

What she doesn't do is charge for her classes. They are provided free of charge.

"I just love teaching," she said. "There is just such joy in being creative."
